SENIOR CLASS PROPHECY

"Once in dear dead days beyond recall
When on the world the mists began to fall"

Thus begins an old familiar love song—a song which tells of times, though dearly loved, yet—almost forgotten. And as we Seniors of ’58 file our high school memories for future reference and eagerly look forward into the future those mists begin to rise and we see our places in the world twenty years hence.

It’s a new world, this world of 1978—a world filled with changes and unexpected progress. And as we stand in awe, marveling at this progress, we see some of our old classmates as they move about performing their everyday tasks in this world of up-to-date methods and new inventions. As we come close to the scenes of our youth, signs of change are everywhere present. Gone are the crooked narrow roads; gone is the silence of the small villages; gone are the town limits of Cleves and North Bend as such and through these we see wide, modern eight-lane highways, and hear the constant drone of jet planes and the shrill whistle of the locomotive. What once was a group of homes clustered around a crossroad now is a metropolis of industry and activity. As we pass among the bustling crowd, let’s see how many of our classmates we can find. We won’t be able “to do” the town in a day as we used to but we may find some of the more prominent members of our class in the downtown section.

Here is Fox’s Department Store with its large merchandising department. Looking inside, we see ROBERT FOX, now the president; MALCOLM DUNN, the art consultant; and MARJORY ABIDON and LELIA KINNEY, new buyers for the specialties. And next to the Store (just as it used to be) is the headquarters of the city’s largest daily newspaper. GARY ARGO, the editor of the Morning Star has SANDRA SHAW and PATRICIA SCANLON as reporters.
