Prophecy Of The Class Of '41

It had been many years since I had visited dear old Taylor so I decided to return to see if I could learn anything of my old classmates of '41. When I arrived at school, I proceeded to the office at once for I was quite sure of learning something of them there. When I entered I was most surprised to find Huey Coward, superintendent of the school. In '41 we might have seen Huey in the office but we never thought of seeing him behind the desk. We had much to say of past years. Huey said he would send for Roberta Smith, physical education director, Marjorie Byrnside, a history teacher, and Jack Burress, his mathematics instructor. I told them why I had come. They said they could tell me about our classmates for many had settled near-by. We found our annual of '41 and began looking through it. We had many laughs over the pictures of it; then read the calendar and talked of the various events of the year. I noticed a newspaper, edited by Edward Murray, on Huey's desk. Huey told me Ed's paper was quite a success and that Harold Fisher was the cartoonist. Articles on the front page were covered by Irene Steele and Kenneth Butler. There had been a big fire and guess who the fire chief was—Marion Houze!

I asked Huey what had happened to his old friend George Steinmann and was quite surprised to learn George had founded a hospital. Goldie McClanahan was his assistant surgeon and two of his nurses were Helen Smith and Avalyn Fangman with Irene Bolser as chief dietitian. I was
